

ANTHONY L. ROSE, PH.D.
WORKING FOR THE SYNERGY OF LIFE

Anthony Rose is a social psychologist, author, and educator who has taught courses in learning theory, group dynamics, social change, drug education, the psychology of prejudice, human social evolution, and conservation values at universities including UCLA, UCSD, CSU San Diego & Northridge, Northern Arizona University, and Antioch University. Dr. Rose has consulted to public and private sector organizations on educational innovation, race and cross-cultural relations, community and organization development, strategic planning, and quality assurance. In 1994 Dr. Rose began traveling and working worldwide for the conservation of nature. His current focus is on the impact of biosynergy on human development and social change.

Dr. Rose has published books and scores of articles in scientific and popular anthologies and journals, facilitated and lectured at dozens of international conferences, and studied the synergy of social systems and nature in Africa, Asia, and the Americas. Rose's original studies of natural epiphanies demonstrated the factors that affect humane values and expand world-view from ego and human centered to eco and life centered. His work to restore humane values worldwide and his innovative programs in conservation values education in equatorial Africa, have been supported by a host of organizations including - Conservation International, Center for Applied Biodiversity Science, American Zoo & Aquarium Association, International Fund for Animal Welfare, Bellerive Foundation, Gorilla Foundation, Margot Marsh Biodiversity Foundation, and Newman's Own Foundation.

Anthony Rose developed and taught the first laboratory course in learning & behavior modification at UCLA (1961) and earned his Ph.D. in psychology in 1967 while serving as research fellow at the UCLA Brain Research Institute. He took an NIMH postdoctoral fellowship at Western Behavioral Sciences Institute (WBSI) to work with renowned humanist Carl Rogers. With Rogers and others, Rose co-founded and directed Center for Studies of the Person (CSP) in La Jolla, California. While at CSP, Rose published Growing Up Human (1974) – a groundbreaking book about the realization of human potential; produced educational games and films; and co-facilitated an award winning TV documentary on drug abuse prevention with Dr. Rogers. During the past four decades Rose has consulted to scores of organizations including Sisters of the Immaculate Heart, Episcopal Archdiocese of California, US Forest Service, US Navy, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Systems Development Corporation, Union Bank, US Veterans Administration and two dozen universities and public school districts. He served seven years as director of organization design and research in the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Care Program in Southern California and Hawaii. Dr. Rose is currently CEO of The Biosynergy Institute, president of Altisima Press, a fellow of the WBSI International Leadership Forum, and a member of the American and International Primatological Societies.

Dr. Rose founded The Biosynergy Institute in 1994 to study and advance the synergy of humanity and nature. Under the BSI umbrella he established the Epiphany Project (1994), the Bushmeat Project (1996), and Altisima Press (2002). In 2004 Altisima Press published Rose's extraordinary coffee table book Consuming Nature, which has been acclaimed as a tour de force in the battle to save rainforests, threatened wildlife, and indigenous people in their remaining homelands worldwide.
